

ABSTRACT

A data storage system capable of performing remote data services (e.g., data mirroring) over an IP network using native connections to the IP network is described. The data storage system employs an architecture that manages the remote data services and the native connections to the IP network in a way that isolates the remote data services application software from the TCP/IP and lower level network processing.

20345219.doc

20345219.doc